

Chubby Heart backpack, £320, anyahindmarch.com

I'm lusting after anything from Anya Hindmarch's Chubby range at the moment. This heart backpack is super-cool and seems to scream 'I love you'. It'd also make a rather chic alternative to a nappy bag, don't you think?

February is one of my favourite months. You can't help but think of Valentine's day and I love seeing hearts everywhere. I know everyone seems to jump on the bandwagon and it feels like Christmas has only just finished, but I really enjoy making Valentine cards with the children and baking love-heart biscuits. My father still has a Valentine card that I wrote to him when I was my daughter's age and it makes me smile when I see it. I thought I'd written it perfectly, but I'd signed off with "Guess Shoe?!"

It's a busy month and with half term coming up, we'll be back and forth from the countryside, so I'm planning lots of trips to the Science Museum. I hope you enjoy my dream picks this month.

Mayfair watch, £425, bamfordlondon.com
I know I'm biased, but my husband designs these awesome Mayfair watches and I can't resist sharing the red dial, which comes with a free engraving, making a perfect Valentine's present for all those daddies out there.

WHERE TO GO

You never really think of The Science Museum as being a good stop-off for a baby, but its incredible Pattern Pod is an amazing multi-sensory area for children under eight. And when I say under eight, I mean even babies love it. They can explore water ripples without actually getting wet, recognise and copy patterns and listen to all sorts of sounds. My littlest one absolutely loves it and the great news is that it's free AND open daily. sciencemuseum.org.uk

Agatha Ruiz de la Prada shoes, £26, alexandalex.com

I don't have a baby girl anymore, but if I could squeeze my seven-year-old daughter into these, I would. These from Agatha Ruiz de la Prada T-bars shoes are absolutely adorable.
