

My youngest is at that stage now where I am thinking of taking the bars off the bed, although I am not sure I am ready yet. I have the Stokke Sleepi bed which cleverly transforms from cot to cot bed with ease, but I have a feeling that I will be putting a baby gate on his door. £575, stokke.com

I'm a complete sucker for toile de jouy and although it might be a little over the top for a children's bedroom, I have fallen in love with some Alice in Wonderland wallpaper from Murals Wallpaper. I know I would love to have had this in my room as a little girl. muralswallpaper.co.uk

I am a bonfire baby, born on the 5 November, so it's an exciting month for us with any excuse for a party, especially when it involves toffee apples and fireworks. As well as wrapping up and getting out as much as possible, I love spending cosy time by the fire and getting in the Christmas swing. I've been doing a bit of interior work at home this year and I absolutely love designing children's rooms.

When I was a child, I used to have a sheepskin rug next to my bed, and it's still at my parents' house now. This 100 per cent natural sheepskin, with a lovely suede back, brings a really sumptuous feel to any nursery. £75, loaf.com

WHERE TO GO

The organisers of the Baby Show have a Baby to Toddler event at ExCel London from 23-24 November, which is a great place to go if you're thinking about decorating. They have a ginormous range of baby and toddler products and, in particular, a fantastic nursery furniture and accessories selection. Parents can also get expert advice on-site at the event. babytotoddlerevents.co.uk

I've gone bonkers for these photo tiles that you can custom print onto tiles that not only stick, but can be re-stuck on your wall without nails or damage. I love the idea of printing family snaps to have in a nursery, and it's so nice to be able to get new baby photos printed and up on the wall quickly and easily. instiles.mobi
